

Abstract

[0046] The invention is directed to a method for producing highly adhesive conductive structures on nonconductive substrates, in particular for application in electric circuits, and to a surface-activating compound for use in the method. The method comprises the following method steps: application and selective irradiation of a surface-activating compound, and subsequent electroless metallization of the irradiated areas to form metallic structures.